

PART ONE of FOUR: Christianity's Most Important Convert: The Apostle Paul

In February 2018 I gave a series of four lectures for the Smithsonian Associates in Washington DC, based on my book The Triumph of Christianity. It was a bit tricky, as these things always are, figuring out which parts of the book to focus on, since each lecture could really be only on one thing, not lots of things. I decided to give the first lecture on the most important convert in the history of Christianity — not Constantine (as I argue in the book) but the apostle Paul. Without that conversion, would we even have had Christianity as a world-wide religion? Good question! It's hard to know. But it is clear that this was a conversion of massive importance. Here is the lecture:

Viewing for blog members only! If you'd like to join the blog, we'd like to have you. Doesn't cost much and you get tons of value — and every penny goes to charity. So go for it!

You need to be logged in to see this part of the content. Please Login to access.

Who Were The “Pagans” Christians Were Converting?
Revelation as a Blueprint for our Future