

OK, this is a bit unexpected. But I'm going to be in New York (Midtown Manhattan) for a few days (that part was expected) and it turns out I'll have an evening free, August 27. And so if anyone's interested I can do a blog dinner. Given the location, it might be kind of pricey, but ... well, if you're interested, wanna come?

As per my custom: the table will be limited to eight, of which I will be one. That means seven spots are available. First come first served: please do NOT response here on the blog, but send me a private email, at behrman@email.unc.edu.

No agenda from my end, other than simply to have some of us to have a chance to meet and talk about matters of mutual interest.

The only requirements for attendance to the dinner are that (a) you are a blog member; (b) you pay your own way - both getting to the event and your meal itself. Otherwise, there is no expense and no requirement. You don't even have to feel obliged to say much.

If you want to come and know for sure you can, zap me a note. Do so right away: if past experience is any guide, the table will fill rather quickly. I will notify the lucky winners via email. And if/when the table is filled, I will put another announcement the blog.

Do You Need a Free Membership?
Blog Dinner in D.C.: Full!